Khoto, Pula, Nala!

Peace, Rain, Prosperity! This national motto of Lesotho and greeting used by the Basotho is an appropriate way to welcome you to the Water in Africa website. It reflects the deep connection of water to all aspects of life in African countries, a concept Coverdell World Wise Schools has tried to capture in the resources and learning units featured on this site.

Funded through a grant from the Department of Education, the Water in Africa project was realized over a two-year period by a team of Peace Corps Volunteers.

UNITED NATIONS HUMAN RIGHTS DAY

The theme for Human Rights Day 10 December 2010 is human rights defenders who act to end discrimination.

Human rights defenders acting against discrimination, often at great personal risk to both themselves and their families, are being recognized and acclaimed on this day.

Human rights defenders speak out against abuse and violations including discrimination, exclusion, oppression and violence. They advocate justice and seek to protect the victims of human rights violations. They demand accountability for perpetrators and transparency in government action. In so doing, they are often putting at risk their own safety, and that of their families. Some human rights defenders are famous, but most are not. They are active in every part of the world, working alone and in groups, in local communities, in national politics and internationally.

Human Rights Day 2010 will highlight and promote the achievements of human rights defenders and it will again emphasize the primary role Governments must play in enabling and protecting their role. The Day is also intended to inspire a new generation of defenders to speak up and take action to end discrimination in all of its forms whenever and wherever it is manifested.

We do this by empowering ordinary people to become extraordinary voices for the end of poverty in their communities, the media, and the halls of government. MOTO: Speak Powerfully, Inspire Decision Makers, Write Letters, Generate Media.
